WHITE NOISE

SARAH DARLING

This body of work is very much a journal and keepsake of a place where words were unreachable and where making became a cathartic response to my own surroundings and physical existence.

Working at home amongst the equal chaos and quietness of new life inescapably made its way into these paintings. As I watched my new baby meet the world I thought about my own early memories and the colours within them.

Attempting to work in my usual way whilst simultaneously experiencing such an intense moment in life felt like an abstract dream in itself. To me these paintings feel like a map of a very specific and special time.
